

Question for Council from Mr Daniel Fulton

Does the leader of the council agree that threats of unlawful physical violence have no place in the political life of the United Kingdom and that it would be an extraordinarily serious matter if a political party were seen to use its control of the apparatus of the state to surveil, track, and target its perceived political opponents?