As I often commented when with you, there may be little problem if we miss the target for all of our callers by only a few seconds; though the target itself entails a very long wait of

90 seconds. But there could be a real problem if missing the target means that some callers are left on hold interminably. And when the *average* is 500 seconds -- over 8 minutes! -- as it seems to have been in May 2021, it's hardly surprising that an awful lot of calls are dropped; though there is nothing here to tell us how many that is. Before I resigned from the Council, I was assured that new software would ensure that proper statistical analysis would be provided on KPIs, including geeky things like means and standard deviations. Now nearly a year on we are still presented with the almost meaningless graphs we always had. I do not criticise your overworked officers, but I don't see how you can properly understand the situation absent real data. When will full details be presented in the KPI reports?
