| Financial criteria  | Explanation   | Group Option  | Stand alone option  |
|---------------------|---|---|---|
| Funding             | The current economic climate hasaffected Housing Association fundingas much as any other part of theeconomy. There is currently adifficulty in gaining loans for bothnew and established Associationsand there is no evidence that one islikely to be more successful than theother. The overall position isexpected to change over the next 12months and no transfer has yet failedto be funded.   | Previously, it was our expectationthat the Group would be able to gainbetter terms for loans than a newstand alone but this seems to be nolonger the case. Costs of borrowingand interest rates will be higher thanpreviously envisaged and someAssociations would find it moredifficult than others to raise additionalfinance because of their current loanposition   | It is expected that funding for standalone Associations will continue butthe market is much smaller and costsare increasing substantially. Boththese costs will need to be factoredinto the Business Plan and thevaluation  |
| CentralServices | The Council currently providescentral services to the HousingDepartment, e.g. financial services,Human Resources, Legal Services,Information Technology, etc. In aGroup, the services are likely to beprovided in a similar way to theCouncil, by the Group parent, withthe charges being negotiatedbetween the parent and thesubsidiary. In a stand alone position,it is likely that the Association wouldinitially purchase some of these | It would be important for the Group toprovide the services from the Groupparent, to help it achieve theeconomies of sale that it needs togain from growth. Although this canbe identified as part of thenegotiations and taken into accountfor the valuation, any futurearrangements would be negotiatedbetween the parent and thesubsidiary. There is unlikely to beany choice for the Association to buythem elsewhere but in the first | Most stand alone Associations makearrangements with the Council forthe provision of services directly aftertransfer, given the amount of workinvolved in setting up newarrangements. This can last foraround a year (longer in someinstances). After that, it is for theAssociation to decide how to provideits services, whether to have inhouse staff, or to provide fromelsewhere. The advantage is that thecontrol is with the Association, the |

|                             | services, if not all, from the Councilbefore setting up its own in-houseteam or buy the services fromelsewhere. In some circumstancesthere may be secondary TUPEobligations after a service is boughtfrom the Council  | instance they may purchase somefrom the Council, such as IT. It wouldbe expected that the Group shouldbe able to provide services at acompetitive cost and potentiallywould be able to afford morespecialist staff, or to recruit andretain higher calibre individuals thanwould be the case for stand alone(this depends on the size of theGroup)  | disadvantage is that it may not gain from the economies of scale.   |
| Long termsustainability | It is difficult at time of transfer toeffectively consider all the potentialrisks for which there is a differencebetween the two options in terms ofmitigation. The Business Plan forboth options would be put togetheron the basis of a sustainableorganisation, with the necessarystress testing and sensitivities carriedout. | The key benefit of being in a Groupis that should problems emerge fromthe Business Plan, then the financialstrength of the Group should be ableto assist. However, should theproblem be one that is effecting allsubsidiaries, then the extent of thissupport cannot be guaranteed. In aGroup situation there is somepotential for an internal market forservices between membercompanies; this saves the VATelement of any charges | The Business Plan for the standalone option would be risk assessedto ensure that it is robust. This wouldbe a requirement of funders. It islikely that a greater amount ofcontingency would be included anda more prudent approach would beadopted, than would be the case fora new subsidiary, which could resultin a lower valuation. The stand alonecould seek to sell its services toanother RSL, or purchase services. |

Given the extent of thepurchasing necessary, savingsshould be made through smartprocurement  | other forms of procurement that canassist the subsidiary in getting theright deal. The Group may also haveprocurement deals which thesubsidiary can join, but this mayreduce local choice   | advice) on procurement to ensurethat it can make the necessary gains.Given that it will want to start theworks programme as soon aspossible after transfer, this mayreduce the overall gain that could bemade. However, it may be easier toinvolve tenants in the selection ifthere are no existing deals. |
| Pre ballotassistance | In certain circumstances, where aGroup Structure is envisaged thenthe Association contributes to the preand post ballot costs of the Council.They can also provide other forms ofassistance, e.g. staffing resources,expertise, etc.   | As part of the bidding process, it isnormal for bidding Associations toagree to meet some of the Council'scosts for the pre-ballot period. Thiscan be in the region of £200K -£300K. They often also provideexpertise in terms of communicationsskills, etc or staff to back up theCouncil's team | The Council would meet the pre-ballot costs although provided thetransfer takes place, then this can beset against the capital receipt   |
| Post ballotcosts     | For a stand alone the post ballotcosts are shared between theCouncil and the Association (in theform of a loan) whereas the parent isexpected to meet the post ballotcosts for the subsidiary. Costs caneasily be in the region of £2m - £3monce the costs of borrowing aretaken into account. | All the post ballot costs are met bythe parent or the subsidiary. In realitythis normally means that the costsare factored into the Business Planof the subsidiary. They are notfactored into the valuation.  | Here the Council will make a loan tothe Association for its set up costs,some of which will be repayable. TheAssociation will need to build therepayable elements into its BusinessPlan. The Council's post ballot costscan be set against the capital receipt.  |

| VATshelter/RTBsharing | It is likely that the Council and theAssociation will enter into a VATshelter to allow the Association toreclaim VAT on the works required atthe outset. The benefits will beshared between the two parties.There will also be an agreement toshare the future receipts from RTBsales | The subsidiary will enter into the twoarrangements which will benegotiated outside of the valuations.This is the same as for a standalone. | The subsidiary will enter into the twoarrangements which will benegotiated outside of the valuations.This is the same as for a GroupStructure |
